Home education is a legal alternative to school education in Australia. State and territory governments are responsible for regulating home education and have different registration requirements, however home educating families are able, and encouraged, to develop curriculum and learning programs to suit the educational and developmental needs of their individual children.

Always Learning Books is committed to providing practical information to help families get started and continue educating their children at home. Instead of providing text books and student work books, our main author Beverley Paine focuses on writing books and booklets that encourage families to develop their own learning programs and activities. Her books aim to demystify education and present it as a rewarding, fun and challenging activity for the whole family.

About Beverley Paine

Beverley Paine's curiosity about education began in her early teens and blossomed into a passionate interest once she became a parent in 1981. With her husband Robin she discovered the joy of becoming fully involved with the children's educational and social development, becoming family day care providers, playgroup coordinators and volunteering at their daughter's preschool, until they discovered home education as an alternative to school in 1985. Since then Beverley has accumulated considerable experience helping children learn in both school and home learning situations. To extend her understanding of how children learn she volunteered as a classroom aide at her local primary school and studied Early Childhood Education at the University South Australia. In 1989 she began the South Australian Home Education Support Group and newsletter SA Home Based Learner, followed in 1995 with the Fleurieu Home Based Learners Network. For three years she was the Home Education Association of Australia Editor. She writes for and maintains the extensive collection of articles on The Educating Parent, a formerly known as Homeschool Australia and Unschool Australia.

Over the years Beverley has counseled thousands of prospective and continuing home educating parents. Her open attitude to educational alternatives and approaches inspires confidence and demonstrates respect for the right of parents to determine their family's unique educational needs. Beverley sees education as flexible and dynamic, with an emphasis on reflecting the needs and interests of individual children within the context of family and community. Her beliefs reflect the right of home educating families to use a variety of resources and methodologies, constantly adjusting their approach with the aim of achieving excellence.

Always Learning Books is owned by Beverley's daughter, April Jermey.
